The inspiring story of boxer Tim Bradley, who rose from a difficult, violent childhood to become a champion boxer, husband, father and role model. Written for middle-grade readers and up, it shows how someone with a self-described “thug mentality” can rise to greatness and be a credit to his community, family and the sport he loves.

Hard to Heart was written with style by Bill Dwyre, the award-winning, 25-year sports editor of the Los Angeles Times, and winner of the career achievement award from the Boxing Writers Association of America. An easy, drama-filled read in 118 pages, the book includes a timeline of Bradley's life, a list of his professional fights and a glossary of boxing terms to make the sport accessible to all readers.

The book includes photographs from the Bradley family archive. Both paperback and e-Book editions are available.
